Rutland Boughton
(1878–1960)

King Arthur had three sons

This folk song appears in English County Songs (1893), a collection by Lucy Broadwood. She notes the source as from Lancashire. In One Hundred English Songs (1914) the song is listed as “a traditional Lancashire song.”

King Arthur had three sons—
That he had;
He had three sons of yore,
And he kicked 'em out o' door
Because they could not sing—
That he did;
He had three sons of yore,
And he kicked 'em out o' door
Because they could not sing.

The first, he was a miller—
That he was;
The second, he was a weaver—
That he was;
And the third, he was a little tailor boy,
And he was mighty clever—
That he was.

The miller stole some grist for his mill,
And the weaver stole some loom,
And the little tailor boy,
He stole some corduroy
To keep those three rogues warm—
That he did;
And the little tailor boy,
He stole some corduroy
To keep those three rogues warm.

Oh the miller, he was drowned in his dam,
And the weaver, he was killed at his loom,
And old Nick, he cut his stick with the little tailor boy
With the broad-cloth under his arm—
That he did!

[note: Old Nick is a folk term for the Devil]

Rutland Boughton (1878-1960) was the son of a grocer of Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire. He showed exceptional talent at an early age and studied briefly at the Royal College of Music. Finances caused him to abandon the RCM after only one year. Although he was substantially self-taught, he had opportunity to study with Charles Villiers Stanford and Walford Davies. He was good friends with Gustav Holst, Granville Bantock, Edward Elgar, Thomas Beecham and George Bernard Shaw. Boughton's output included three symphonies, several concertos, part-songs, songs, and chamber music but he is primarily known as a composer of opera and the principal English advocate of the theories of music drama expounded by Richard Wagner. Boughton set out to create a new form of opera he called "choral drama". He was enamored with Arthurian legends and created an "Arthurian Cycle" of operas. He had planned a fourteen-day cycle of dramas on the life of Christ in which the story would be enacted on a small stage in the middle of an orchestra while soloists and the chorus would comment on the action. However, it never developed. His Bethlehem (1915) is based on the Coventry Nativity Play and notable for its choral arrangements of traditional Christmas carols. That work became very popular with choral societies worldwide. Arthurian legends, narrative folk-tales and other stories were often the basis for his part-songs, some titled "Choral Variations". As a result, some of them are a little longer than the norm for the genre.
